

Darrin Johnson specializes in FERC Licensing and Compliance, serving the Water sector out of Mead & Hunt's Middleton office. Darrin graduated from Northland College in Ashland, WI in 1991. He began his career working in a variety of jobs in local, state, and federal resource agencies primarily in wildlife management. In 2007, he began working in the hydropower industry as a FERC licensee at a Wisconsin utility. There he was primarily tasked with conducting FERC license compliance activities, obtaining authorization for dam safety-related construction projects, conducting environmental studies, and assisting with FERC relicensing activities. In 2016, he moved into the consulting world where he has focused on assisting utilities in conducting environmental reviews of electric, gas, and dam safety construction projects, FERC relicensing, resource agency consultation, and assisting with overall FERC license compliance activities. Outside of work, Darrin enjoys spending time camping and hiking outdoors with his family.
